Purpose

To escort and supervise children and young people with additional support needs to and from schools and other educational establishments.

The transition at the end of compulsory education into new learning opportunities is very important for young people. Fife has developed a school and post school strategy for ensuring all young people, and in particular, vulnerable young people, have a suitable offer of post 16 learning. It is based on three interconnected processes:

- Identification of intended destination
- Provision of advice and support in order to achieve this destination
- Provision of learning opportunities appropriate to learner

Key workers have a major role in the achievement of Fife Council's priority of reducing economic inactivity among young people. They will do this by working with young people, both in a school and post school context, who face a broad range of barriers to progression into employment, further education or training or who are at risk of disengaging. The key worker will therefore support the implementation of pre and post 16 transition processes and activities in their identified schools. Typically the above will involve managing an agreed caseload of disengaged and excluded young people.
